the traces of the wreck which occurred on the Pennsylvania Railroad at that point last evening.

The accident, which resulted from the telescoping of the west-bound Chesa-peake and Ohio express with the Waverley accommodation, just west of the bridge, and caused the death of one person and the injury of a score of others, is believed to be due to the gross carelessness of George June, the operator at the block signal tewer, a quarter of a mile east of the scene of the dissister.

The accident occurred about 5.25 P. M. The Waverly accommodation, which left Jersey City at 4.52 P. M. had come to a stop just west of the Huckensack Eridge for cond. Engineer Martindale found that something was the matter with the air-brake, and was underneath his engine repairing the defect. Conductor Charles Campbell, who had been notified of the necessary delay, sent Ericket. with the air-brake, and was underneath his engine repairing the defect.
Conductor Charles Campbell, who had been notified of the necessary delay, sent Brakeman John Chessman back over the bridge to signal the Chesapeake and Ohio express, which had left Jersey City at 5.13.

It was the duty of Operator June, at the signal tower, to stop all approaching trains, until he knew the Waverly local was out of the block. This he falled to do, for Engineer Farrell, of the express, says that when he approached the tower the white safety signal was exposed, and he went right on at the rate of forty miles an hour. When he reached the bridge, he saw Chessman waving his red lantern frantically, and the standing train just beyond. Farrell reversed his engine and put on the airbrakes, but it was too late to avert the coilision, and, a moment later, his engine crashed into the rear car of the local with such force as to drive it half-way through the car, grinding the woodwork to splinters and telescoping two of the forward cars.

About thirty people were in the rear car. William Phillips, of Newark, was standing at the rear door, and saw the locomotive thundering down upon them. "Jump for your lives!" he shouted and several leaped from the windows before the crash came. This timely warning do doubt saved many lives. Engineer Martindale, who was underlied engine, was dragged along several wards and trightfully mangled.

Mr. Elewitt, who was standing on the front platform of the third car, which elescoped with the one in front of it, was caught between the iron platform rails and crushed to death aimost instanty. His left leg was torn off at the hip. The were more than a hundred passengers on the train, and they were all

There were more than a hundred passengers on the train, and they were all badly shaken up, while some of those in the rear car were terribly bruised and battered. Those most seriously injured were: George W. Estey. Patrick J. Melean, William Phillips, Mrs. Axt. Mrs. Deck, Miss Rastler, Mrs. Strausburg and Charles T. Swain.

To add to the horror, a local train from Newark came along on the other track just after the collision, and crashed into the end of one of the cars of the wrecked train, which had been detailed and lay across the east-bound track.

Most of the injured people were immediately taken to Newark Some LINCOLN, Jan. 20.—The Supreme Court has handed down an opinion in the case of Norton against Van Camp, made famous by the action of the Legislature in deposing Chester Norton and seating J. G. Taruse without the formality of a contest.

Norton applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus, compelling Van Camp, Clerk of Knox County, to give him a certificate. Norton received his certificate, only to be ousted by the Legislature without a hearing.

The Court now holds that its action was binding, and that the Legislature acted in a revolutionary manner.
